Deireann rud éigin faoin saol atá ag mná i Uganda!

Read the passage carefully and answer the questions that follow in full sentences.

As soon as married man becomes ill, friends and relatives are told that they are responsible for his medical care and comfort. He may be taken to a hospital or a medicine man. The wife is particularly worried and does all in her power to help her husband. If all attempts to save his life fails and he finally dies, all his children are asked to come home unless they reside overseas. The sons and daughters come home to pay their last respect to their father.

The wife brushes her hair and changes her clothing. Instead of putting any sort of dress she likes, she is instructed to use black dress to signify mourning for a dead husband.

It is a serious offence if she is ever seen wearing cloth which is not black. No matter where she is going she must put on black dresses. After a period of six months she is allowed to use any color she chooses.

For the first week following the death of her husband, she remains indoors. Neighbors and sympathizers bring food for her because she is not allowed to cook. If she is not popular, she may not get complete three meals daily. She relies exclusively on the generosity and benevolence of her late husband's relatives. She does not talk to any man unless such a man comes from either of the two families. At the end of the mourning period she has to decide whether to remarry or not. If she already has children, she may not remarry. In this case if she insists on getting a new husband, one of her late husband's brothers takes her as one of his wives. Generally she is free to remain widow.
